According to Traditional Chinese Medicine,
the ear is a microsystem of the entire body.

There are over 200 points on the ear that are believed to correspond to different points on the body, both physical and emotional.

The stimulation of these points is called

AURICULOTHERAPY

(pronounced Awe-ric-u-low-therapy)

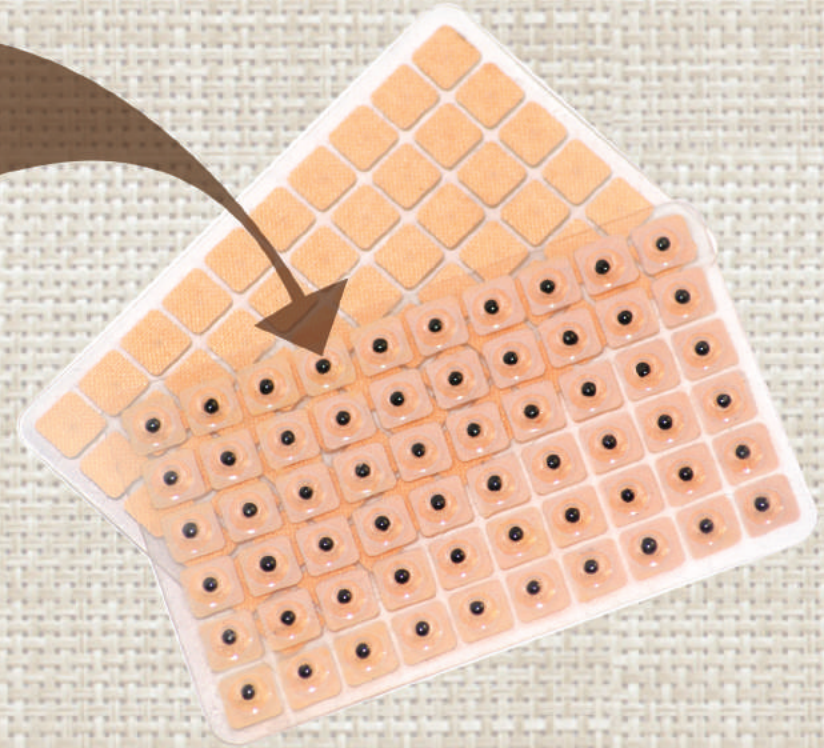

Acupuncturists will often stimulate those points with needles in a standard acupuncture session.

Ear seeds are another tool used to stimulate those points. They are safe, natural and noninvasive, sitting on the surface of the ear and held in place with a patch of adhesive tape.

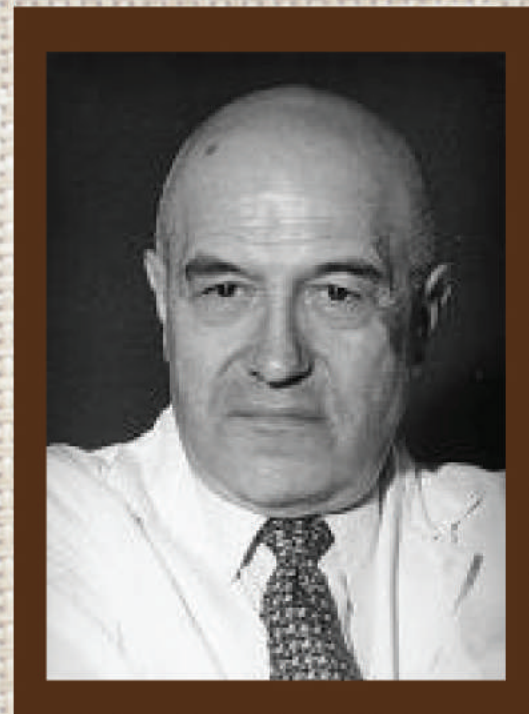

The seeds come from the vaccaria plant.
This purple flowering plant is known in chinese medicine as a blood tonifier, promoting energy and overall health and well-being.

Although auriculotherapy has been around for thousands of years, it was more deeply explored and studied by a french physician in the 1950's.

Dr. Paul Nogier came to be known as "The Grandfather of Auriculotherapy."

According to the World Health Organization, the ear is perhaps the most studied microsystem of the entire body.

earseeds.com makes no claims or associations with any of these books.

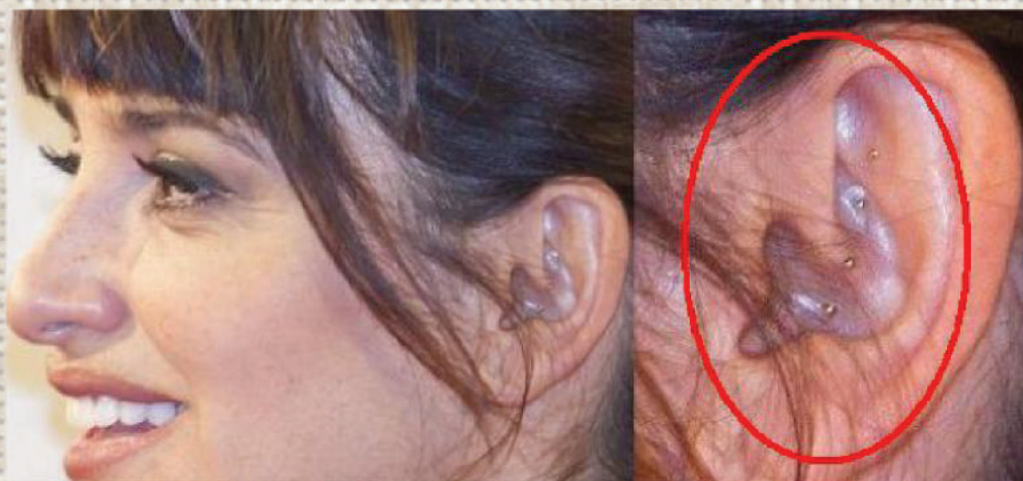

In recent years, auriculotherapy has also seen a rise in popularity.
